Chesterton Academy Meets $75,000 Challenge Grant From Minnesota Entrepreneur Andrew Redleaf

Funds Will Support New Independent High School
Offering Classical and Uniquely Integrated Curriculum

ST. LOUIS PARK, Minnesota (April 11, 2011) – Chesterton Academy, a private, independent college preparatory school, announced today that it met and exceeded the $75,000 challenge grant received from Minnesota entrepreneur and philanthropist Andrew Redleaf. Over 250 donors from across the country provided gifts to help Chesterton Academy meet the Challenge, which ultimately totaled $162,500 for the young school. The successful campaign comes as the school readies for its fourth year of operation.

Chesterton Academy, a classical high school, started in fall of 2008 with just 10 students. Today, the school enrolls 43 students in grades nine, through 12, and expects to reach 60 students when the 2011-2012 school year begins in the fall.

Redleaf's gifts to Chesterton Academy have been crucial to a school that relies heavily on fund-raising and receives no public support. To keep the school affordable, Chesterton charges the lowest tuition of any non-public high school in the Twin Cities. Financial aid is offered to families in need. At $5,500 for the 2010-2011 school year, the tuition represents about two-thirds of the actual cost of educating a student, with the remainder made up by donors.

Mr. Redleaf is a native of the Twin Cities and a graduate of St. Paul Academy and Yale University. A passionate supporter of classical education, Redleaf says that watching the young school's progress persuades him that a Jewish entrepreneur emerging as the leading supporter of a school "in the Catholic tradition" is really a perfect fit.

Chesterton "offers a rigorous classical education priced for middle-class families of any faith. That's huge for the Twin Cities." Redleaf emphasizes: "It's not just talk or a vague goal. Chesterton is really delivering on the promise of the classical curriculum. Recently I met with Headmaster Niemann to review the reading list and what's expected of the students and I had one word to say afterward: 'impressive.'"

Redleaf says he is even more impressed with "the demeanor, the maturity, the poise, and the kindness of the students." Chesterton students, "look adults in the eye, speak in complete sentences and have something to say," he comments. "If every school could raise up adults like those young men and women this country could face the future unafraid."

Redleaf's company, Whitebox Advisors, is an investment adviser located in Minneapolis. The firm manages approximately $3 Billion and employs over 70 professionals. Celebrated by the New York Times and others for predicting the mortgage crisis long before it happened, Redleaf's monthly client letter is avidly read and quoted not only on "the Street" but also in the financial press.
